PREFACE.

CANON WILSON, to whom the Chapter of Worcester owes the arrangement, one might say the rehabilitation, of its long neglected archives, has already printed two series of the Compotus or Account Rolls of the officials of Worcester Cathedral Priory, belonging respectively to the thirteenth and sixteenth centuries, together with a few Cellarer's Rolls of the fourteenth. The present volume contains similar accounts of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. In selecting them, my object has been to exhibit at least one specimen of a Roll of every one of the Obedientiaries of the Priory, at dates ranging from 1326 to 1493; in some cases two or more of the same official are given. The Priors' Rolls I have not touched: they seem to me, as far as I can judge from the perusal of the earliest of them, that of Prior John de Evesham (1341), and a less careful examination of some others, to be of quite a different character from the rest. Prior Mildenham (1499—1506) decreed that the Prior's Roll should contain in a compendious form not only his own accounts, but those of all the officials besides: and the result of his decree we see in the Roll of Prior More printed by Canon Wilson in 1907. That is the type of all the Priors' Rolls from Mildenham's time onwards: they exhibit a conspectus of the finances of the whole Community. Evesham's Roll on the other hand seems rather to be his bill against the Convent for expenditure which he considers ought to be repaid him; and the Rolls of the later Priors, down to Mildenham, appear to be concerned only with extraordinary expenses, on such occasions as their own installation, or a royal or episcopal visit. These would doubtless be of great interest, but seem to require separate treatment.

In transcribing I have followed the spelling of the MSS., but I have expressed all numbers in Arabic numerals. It is said of Lord Burghley that throughout his life he found it easier to read such a sum as Miiij^{c} iij^{xx} vij*l.* xvj*s.* ij*d.* ob. q., so written, than if it were expressed as £1,467 16*s.* 2¾*d.* To us the notation which he preferred seems to reduce all calculation to mental arithmetic; but it must be remembered that it is the notation used throughout these accounts, as in all accounts of the same period. Perhaps this fact may excuse the numerous errors in addition which may be found in the rolls, to some of which I have called attention.

I cannot plead the same excuse, but can only express my regret, for an error which occurs twice in the text. The year 10 Richard II. began in July 1386; and therefore the dates given on pp. 24 and 54 for the Rolls of Thomas Hertilbury and John Hatfeld should be corrected from 1387-88 to 1386-87.

S. G. HAMILTON.

INTRODUCTION.

BEFORE examining in detail the Accounts printed in the following selection, it may be well to give a brief account of the manors and lands from which the revenues of the Priory were derived.

Most of the manors recorded in Domesday as possessions of the Church of Worcester belong to the Hundred of Oswaldslow, which seems in fact to have been created (by Charter of King Edgar [1]) for the express purpose of including them within a single jurisdiction. The royalty of this Hundred was in the hands of the Bishop, to the exclusion of all interference from the Sheriff and other officers of the King. This privilege is clearly set forth in Domesday as established by the witness of the whole shire [2]; and had it not been that the See was held at the time of the Conquest by an Englishman, and that Englishman Saint Wulstan, it is easy to imagine how an enterprising Norman prelate might have built up for himself upon such a foundation a great temporal lordship, such as at a later time was enjoyed by the Bishops of Ely in their island. But Saint Wulstan had no ambition of this kind; and his secular energies were fully occupied in resisting encroachments on the possessions of his Church, a struggle in which his personal character, his tried loyalty, and, not least, his long life, finally won the day.

As time went on, the Hundred with its privileges grew in extent. In Domesday there are five entries of lands of the Church of Worcester which are reckoned to belong to other hundreds, among them the important manors of Hartlebury and Wolverley. These had been absorbed in Oswaldslow by the reign of Henry III. The process seems to have been carried out indirectly by means of the Confirmation Charters, which it was usual for the great religious houses to procure from successive kings at a beginning of the new reign: it was sufficient to obtain the insertion of a clause affirming that the Bishop, or the Chapter, has all such rights within such and such a manor as he or they possess within any other manor under their jurisdiction; and inclusion within the privileged Hundred followed in time as a matter of course. In Warwick-

[1] Whether this Charter be genuine or not—and it has been doubted since the time of Dr. Hickes—it has at any rate been accepted as a title-deed since about the date of the Conquest.

[2] Episcopus ipsius ecclesie a constitutione antiquorum temporum habet omnes redditiones socharum et omnes consuetudines inibi pertinentes ad dominicum victum et regis seruicium et suum: ita ut nullus vicecomes ullam ibi habere possit querelam, nec in aliquo placito nec in alia qualibet causa. Hoc attestatur totus comitatus.

shire too the Bishop possessed a similar, though perhaps less exclusive, jurisdiction in the Hundred of Pathlow[1], which included the most important Worcester Church manors in that county.

The Courts of these hundreds belonged to the Bishop; the Chapter had very little to do with them; indeed the Convent's share for a whole year in the profits of the Oswaldslow Courts amounted only to 20*d.* in 1377 (p. 14): but the manors of which the hundred was made up were divided between the Bishop and the monks. Within the monastery, certain manors and lands were appropriated to particular offices, and their rents and revenues were accounted for to the Convent by the Obedientiaries who received them, in some cases directly from the tenants, but more often through the Cellarer, who was ex officio Bursar of the community, and in the earlier Rolls has the double title of Cellarer and Bursar. Consequently the Cellarer's Rolls furnish complete lists of the unappropriated manors belonging to the Priory. That printed in this volume (pp. 10—14) enumerates the following :—

1. Blacwell [Blackwell near Shipston : this manor was assigned to the sustenance (victus) of the monks, as the neighbouring Blockley to that of the Bishop].

2. Alvestone [in Warwickshire, separated by the river from Stratford-on-Avon].

3. Clyve [Cleeve Prior, the first Worcestershire parish on the Avon].

4. Herforton [Harvington]. 5. Croppethorne.

6. Netherton. 7. Seggeberwe [Sedgeberrow].

8. Tedyntone [Teddington]. 9. Overbury.

10, 11. Batenhale and Bernes [Battenhall, Barnes Hall, now forming the south-eastern suburb of Worcester].

12. Croule or Crowle. 13. Woluardeleye [Wolverley].

14. Hardewyke [Hardwick, a manor in St. John's, Worcester].

15. Hynewyke [Henwick]. 16. Hallowe.

17. Grymeleye [Grimley]. 18. Bradwas [Broadwas].

19. Humylton [Himbleton]. 20. Tybertone [Tibberton].

21. Newenham, and 22. Mora. [These two manors in the large parish of Lindridge were comprised under the name of Lindridge in King John's Charter of the Four Manors[2] (together with Wolverley, Stoke and Cleeve Prior). The Domesday names of the two ancient Church manors in Lindridge are Ardolvestone and Cnihtetone.]

[1] Since merged in Barlichway Hundred. Dugdale is reluctant to give Pathlow a more extensive title than that of 'Liberty.'

[2] Registrum, p. 11 and foll. This book, which is frequently quoted in the following pages, was compiled about 1240, and edited by Archdeacon Hale for the Camden Society in 1865. The full title is Registrum, sive liber irrotularius et consuetudinarius Prioratus Beate Marie Wigorniensis.

23. Bremesgrave [Bromsgrove] and Northton [King's Norton. The manor at Bromsgrove held by the Priory was that of the Rectory[1], one of the eight manors which existed in this parish. In this place is also inserted the Church of Doderhull, which was appropriated to the Prior].

24, 25. The last two items in the Cellarer's list are not manors: but we learn from the first of them that the Magister Operum had the farm of a house at Henwick: the second shows the rents received from the city of Worcester.

In each of these manors we find a Collector of rents and dues; a Receiver of the proceeds of sale of stock and crops; less frequently mentioned is the Prepositus, a more or less popularly elected Head-man, who represented the tenants in dealing with their lords.

The same order in the heads of the receipts as appears in the Cellarer's Roll is followed in the accounts of the other officials: first, income from manors and lands; next Pensions. These were fixed charges on the revenues of certain churches, the origin of which is obscure, and probably differed in different cases[2]. Then follow receipts from things sold (vendicio bladorum, lane, stauri, etc.); and finally sundry items classed as Outside receipts (recepta forinsecus).

In the expenditure, the first item is nearly always Excessus or superplus, that is, the deficit from the last account to be made up. There is generally a deficit, very seldom a credit balance (remanentia) on the opposite side. Then follow Allocationes, allowances for deficiencies in the rents. The rents were set down in full under income, as in the rent-roll, whether they were received in full or not. In the latter case, the official presenting the account 'prays for an allowance' (petit allocationem[3]) to make up the proper amount. With these allowances may be classed resolutiones reddituum, payments of rents to a superior landlord, as to the Bishop for the manors of Tibberton and Newland (pp. 15, 64), sometimes of salaries charged on the rents, as in the case of the Succentor (p. 45). Then follow the ordinary outgoings of the department (Sacristy, Infirmary, or whatever it may be), under various headings, amongst which is generally one of Upkeep of Buildings (Custus Domorum); special expenditure is classed under Details (Minute), a title which covers some of the most interesting matters to be found in the accounts. The remaining heads of expenditure are not always in the same order; but they generally are (1) Outside payments (forinsecus expensa), for journeys, horse hire, salaries of farm-bailiffs, and the like; under this head also are sometimes included (2) Gifts and presents (dona et exennia). Every Obedientiary gave a Christmas present to the Prior, and to the members of his household; and to other persons, such as the Mace-bearers (clavigeri) of the City, according to custom. (3) Wages (stipendia famulorum). The payment of the servants in common of the Monastery was assigned either to the Cellarer as Bursar, or to particular officials: the Kitchener, for instance, is responsible for the salary of the ferryman at the Water Gate (pp. 26, 30); but there were also servants attached to the different departments (serviens, garcio, in sacristaria, p. 67), and to the persons of the Obedientiaries (valecti). The wages of course differed according to circumstances; but a very ordinary wage for a 'valectus' was 1 mark (13*s.* 4*d.*) a year, with an allowance of half that amount for clothing. Their food was also provided by the Kitchener (p. 26). (4) Law expenses (Placita et negotia), which generally involved a good deal of travelling for attendance at courts in London and elsewhere. (5) The last heading is generally the vague one of Disbursements (Liberatio denariorum), under which the most constantly occurring items are: payments for maintaining scholars at Oxford, no doubt in Gloucester College, the regular nursery of the Benedictine Order; contributions to the expenses of Papal Legates; to the General Chapter of the Order; and tenths of the clergy granted to the King. Also the customary payments of the official to his deputy, and to his 'fellow in choir' (socio in choro).

[1] In the MS. 'Bremesgrave p.': I conjectured this to stand for 'parte': I would now suggest 'personagio.'

[2] The most ordinary case of a pension was when the Bishop appropriated the tithes of a Rectory to a religious house, ordering at the same time a pension to be paid out of them to the Vicar or Curate.

[3] We see here how 'allowance' comes to be an exact translation of 'allocatio.' The petitioner asks that a sum sufficient to make up the full rent may be 'allocated' for the purpose.

There remains one more head of expenditure, occurring in some of the accounts, which requires special notice. On December 16th, the day still noted in our calendar as O Sapientia, began the series of Advent antiphons beginning with O, which were sung at Vespers immediately before Magnificat. Each of these O's was assigned to one of the officials of the Convent, whose duty it was to begin[1] the antiphon in the choir, and to provide the special pittance and allowances which were appointed for the day. O Sapientia was assigned to the Prior; and the other antiphons to certain of the Obedientiaries, following the order of the Sarum Breviary, thus:

1. O Adonai. Precentor.
2. O Radix Jesse. Coquinarius.

[1] In the technical sense of singing the first words; as in the rubric before the Nicene Creed in the Prayer Book of 1549, 'the Priest shall begin, I believe in one God, The Clearkes shall sing the rest.'

3. O Clavis David. Cellerarius.
4. O Oriens splendor. Sacrista.
5. O Rex Gentium. Magister Operum [1].
6. O Emanuel. Camerarius.
7. O Virgo virginum. Pitanciarius.

The Breviary adds an eighth, viz., O Thoma Didyme, to be sung on the festival of St. Thomas, the fifth day after O Sapientia. But this can hardly be considered as one of the series, and we should not be justified without further evidence in assigning it to the Subcellarer, who nevertheless 'made his O,' as the phrase was (p. 34): possibly he combined with the Cellarer, who gave to the Convent on the occasion of his O an allowance more than double that of any other Obedientiary (p. 19). The O Clavis David was also marked by some form of 'recreation,' provided by the Chamberlain (p. 9) [2].

Besides the allowance in money distributed among the monks, which differed greatly in amount in different cases, every one of the officials, when he was making his O, seems to have made a uniform payment of 10*s.* to the Pitancer to provide a pittance for the Convent; but it is not always clear whether this is intended for the donor's pittance, or as a contribution to the Pitancer's own O, as it is described as 'pro O virgo virginum' on pp. 41, 46, and at the last reference there is a further payment of 10*s.* 'to the work of the Cloister' in lieu of pittance. Altogether there are so many cross payments in this matter of the O's that it would require an exhaustive study of all the Rolls to exhibit them in an intelligible form.

The accounts were made up from Michaelmas to Michaelmas, and the audit was doubtless held in October. There is only one direct reference to it in the present selection; the Hostillarius complains (p. 55) that the auditors have never plainly stated the case of the payment due to him from the keeper of the lamps; but it has been 'put off and allowed to accumulate from year to year.' This does not suggest a very strict examination of the accounts; but we may perhaps see the action of the auditors in a sterner mood at p. 46, where the Precentor's attempt to provide 'little comforts' for the brethren is repressed; and it may have been an auditor who took upon himself to 'pardon' a later Precentor's deficit (p. 49).

[1] There is no account roll extant of the Master of the Works: but his O is mentioned p. 34: and in the Registrum, p. 99, it is stated that he receives the profits of a windmill outside St. Martin's, 'et facit inde O Rex Gentium.'

[2] There is no mention in these accounts of the Gardiner's O, which occurs in those edited by Canon Wilson (pp. 55, 64), but it is plain from the Registrum that the Gardinarius is the same person as the Coquinarius, since it is there stated (p. 111 b) that O Radix Jesse and the duty of providing the Convent with sapores, that is, pepper, saffron, and the like, belong to the same person; and this latter duty is clearly seen in our accounts to fall on the Coquinarius. Besides it was the Coquinarius who managed, and accounted for, the land called 'the Garden,' of which the original monastery garden was presumably the nucleus.

We pass now to the particular accounts printed in the present volume.

I. Chamberlain (Camerarius).

Two rolls { Thomas Dene, Michaelmas, 1388—May, 1389.
Roger Kingslond, 1478-79, a full year.

Both account for

(1) The Manors of Stoke Prior, Broadwas [1], Codeston (now Cutsdean) and Mutton or Mitton, the two latter being originally members of the episcopal manor of Bredon.

It may be observed that customary tenures and boon-work, in full force at Stoke in the 14th century, are giving place to fixed rents in the 15th. The change has rather confused Kingslond's account (p. 7).

(2) Lands at Berga (Berrow), Loxley in Warwickshire, the city of Worcester and its suburb of St. John's, and the suburban meadow called Amyesacre.

(3) Pensions from the churches of Hartlebury, Stoke, Harvington, St. Andrew's in Worcester; and (in the later roll only) Quinton in Gloucestershire, and Olston (prob. Alsiston, Alston, near Great Washbourne).

The clothing of the monks, including their bed-clothing, was the special province of the Chamberlain: and the frocks and cowls, boots, shoes and leggings were made up in the monastery; so besides expenditure on cloth and leather [2], we find in both these accounts payments for the salaries of a tailor, a shoemaker and a leatherdresser.

Stitched to the end of Thomas Dene's account is an indenture by which he makes over to his successor a number of goods and chattels belonging to the office, which he hopes will prove sufficient to cover the deficit of about £20, which he leaves behind him after only 7 months of office [3]. It includes the furniture of his chapel and official lodging, and the remainder of his store of cloth in the Sartoria. But farm-stock,

[1] Those manors only which do not appear in the Cellarer's list are printed in italics.

[2] Cloth is described as 'whole Norfolk' and 'straight serge'; as well as white woollen for leggings, and linen for drawers (bracce); leather, corium, and the inferior 'corveys.'

[3] 'Ammotus ab officio,' but not, it seems, for any fault: for he held the same office many times both before and after.

alive and dead, was the bulk of his store, as farming expenses constitute the chief part of the outgoings in his account. It is remarkable how much dilapidated stock was left on hand. One would think that a mattress described as 'debilis et dampnabilis' and a waggon 'utterly broken down and without wheels' were hardly worth enumerating: even his bull is lame.

Kingslond's minute are concerned only with repairs of buildings; amongst them we notice the paving 'in Dorter.'

Both Chamberlains maintain two scholars at Oxford, at the rate of 7*s.* 6*d.* a quarter for each scholar.

II. Cellarer.

Account of William Power, 1376–1377.

The manors which contribute to the Cellarer's (or rather Bursar's) receipts have already been enumerated. Amongst other receipts we may notice a contribution (possibly by bequest) from a former rector of Colewell to the building of the Dormitory, certain sums paid as purchase money for corrodies, and, most interesting item of all, fifty marks (£33 6*s.* 8*d.*) received from the executors of King Edward III. in repayment for an advance (provina). This was the contribution of the Priory of Worcester to a loan of 600 marks collected from the twelve most substantial ecclesiastics and laymen of the County in 1370[1]. His expenditure includes over £50 in old debts paid off, and some £23 in annual pensions, £8 in lawsuits, over £5 in presents. Then he has to entertain the guests of the Priory in the Prior's absence; and the Justices in Eyre: to provide eggs and mustard for the Convent—one would expect this to fall on the Kitchener;—to keep in repair the weirs (especially that at Eymore[2]), and the 'Ship,' which this year was provided with a new sail and rigging. He spends nearly £40 on cloth and furs for the Prior's household, something under £4 for repair of carts and waggons: he sees to the shoeing of the Prior's horses and his own, and to innumerable small repairs in buildings. But the great event of William Power's year of office was the building of the Dormitory (pp. 20, 21),

[1] The original Privy Seal directing the collection of this loan has been discovered and printed by the Rev. J. Harvey Bloom in his 'Original Charters' issued by this Society. See his Appendix.

[2] Eymore, in the ancient parish of Kidderminster, seems to have extended from the Severn to the Stour. Formerly a possession of the Burnells, it was given to the Priory in the time of Edward I. Its value appears to have consisted in wood and water; but it generally appears in the Cellarer's accounts under the head of expense, not of profit. There was a 'lake' by the weir, for which the Priory paid a quit-rent to the Earl of March (p. 15).

which cost £158 15*s.* 3½*d.* in material, besides £67 1*s.* 11*d.* in workmen's wages. With a break at Easter and a shorter one at Whitsuntide the work was going on from December 1st, 1376, to October 30th, 1377. Rough stone was brought from Ombersley, worked stone from Comberton, ready carved, it would seem, into gargoyles and crockets, called from their shape pigs' feet[1] (pedes porcorum): these were carried to Tewkesbury, doubtless to be transported thence on board the ship. The Dormitory has now quite disappeared, but it is said to have been built out at right angles to the Library, over the western side of the Cloister: accordingly we find that some alterations to the Library were made necessary by the new building, and lath-nails for the Library are charged for in this account: and the Treasury (thesauraria) seems to have been also in this part of the buildings, as it was provided with new doors at the same time.

The rest of Power's account is concerned with payments to the prepositi of the different manors for their harvesting; and sundry other matters, amongst them a payment to Brother Everard, Prior at Oxford[2], of 33*s.* 10½*d.* for three years' board, on the occasion of his taking his D.D. degree; also £6 and £5 5*s.* to two other Oxford scholars, one of whom, John Grene, became Prior of Worcester eleven years later, while the other, John Hatfield, we shall find succeeding in the same year (1388) to the office of Precentor.

Finally, besides a debt to the Sacrist discharged, we have these payments to the Prior:

Pensions from churches	- -	23	3	3
From Bromsgrove church	- -	21	6	8
Dodderhill church -	- -	31	0	0
Farm of Berrow chapel	- -	13	6	8
	Making	£88	16	7

which sum may presumably be set down as the Prior's own income, over and above allowances.

The total of the Cellarer's receipts is £666 11*s.* 4½*d.*, and the total expenditure is stated to be £715 19*s.* 11¾*d.*; but the deficit, which is put down as £59 7*s.* 9¾*d.*, is certainly £10 less than that amount.

[1] Parker's Architectural Glossary, s.v. Crocket, quotes Louth Steeple Account (Archæologia x. 80): '54 foot crokytts, price 1 foot 2*d.*' This is the only reference I can find to illustrate this item.

[2] He might—but this is not likely—have been Prior of Gloucester College; more probably he was Prior of the Students there (the modern Dean).

III. Kitchener (Coquinarius).

Two rolls:

Thomas Hertilbury, 1386-87.
Richard Upton, 1477-78.

The manors appropriated to the kitchen were Blackwell and Shipston; with rents from Alveston, Clyve, Herforton, Broadwas, Bromsgrove, and Wolverley; and the weirs of Barbourne, Bevereye, Henwick and Tymberdene had to furnish their due number of eels at the beginning of Lent. As we might expect, these and other rents in kind are very generally commuted for money in the later of these two accounts. There is a great difference between the two Kitcheners in their treatment of the riverside meadows—Mutham, Bevereye, and 'the Garden'—which appertained to their office. Hertilbury, while he lumps together all his rents in a single item, dwells with evident pride on the profits he made with his fat cattle and pigs; and takes care to state that his receipts from hay and manure were nil, because they had all been used on the land. These profits occupy quite a secondary place in Upton's account.

There are two items in Upton's receipts which do not occur in Hertilbury's, viz. a pension from the church of Bibury (a peculiar of the Bishop in Gloucestershire), and an annual charge of 40*s.* on the offerings at the tombs of SS. Oswald and Wulstan. But in this year a penny was all that the Kitchener received from this source!

The principal feature of the expenditure side of both accounts is the table of the weekly cost of food provided for the Convent[1]. Every week is designated by the Introit proper to its Sunday. The average cost for a week in Hertilbury's list is about 67*s.*, in Upton's 46*s.* only: the reason of this seems to be that greater restrictions had been placed on the entertainment of guests in the course of the intervening ninety years. Hertilbury notes in the margin the names of guests whose presence caused additional expense, as 'causa episcopi,' 'causa abbatis de Evesham.' Many of the names figure also in the Cellarer's pension list of nine years before, as Burnell, Cassy, and the unfortunate Sir John Beauchamp, an affection which cost him his head the very next year[2].

'Quem rex Edwardus dilexerat atque Ricardus,'

In Upton's list there are no great fluctuations in the weekly expenditure

[1] The entry (p. 26) of the purchase of ox-tails for le Burthe (broth) should dispose of the legend that our countrymen did not know what to do with their ox-tails, until the French prisoners (of the Napoleonic war) taught us to make soup of them. At any rate those prisoners must have been taken at Cressy.

[2] He was Steward of the Household to Richard II., and was put to death, with others of the King's friends, by the 'Merciless' Parliament of 1388. The line quoted is from an epitaph on him on the fly-leaf of a book, MS. F. 13 in the Chapter Library. He had a pension of £5 (see ante, p. 16).

to account for. The most interesting item in his account is that which gives the titles of the cooks whose salaries he paid. There was a Cook, and a 'Gestencoke,' both at 33*s.* 4*d.*, an undercook called 'Poreger,' at 26*s.* 8*d.*, a scullion (Lixa), at 16*s.* 8*d.*, and a 'Potster,' a boy probably, at 2*s.* 6*d.* Both kitcheners contribute 69*s.* to Scholars at Oxford.

IV. Pitancer (Pitanciarius, Pitansarius).

The first Pitancer's accounts are the two Rolls of Robert de Morton, 1328-29, styled De Hermitagio[1].

The Hermitage of Little Pakington in Warwickshire, founded by a rector of the parish in the reign of Henry I., was given by Gilbert Picot, the lord of the manor, to the monks of Worcester, and confirmed to them by his son William with the assent of Pope Innocent III. in 1203. How long it was maintained as a Hermitage does not appear; in time it came to be merely 'the farm of the Hermitage of Maxstoke,' and so it figures in the later Pitancer's accounts (pp. 33, 37). It was described as 'of Maxstoke' from its position on the borders of that parish; already we see in Morton's account that the 'men of Pakington' were considered as hostile aliens (p. 33).

It would seem from the accounts before us that the Hermitage was still regarded as a separate institution in Robert de Morton's time, but the incompleteness of his second roll suggests that it was just on the point of being merged in the mass of the possessions of Worcester Priory. Morton did not think it worth while to add up his items. In these there is no building mentioned, except a 'camera,' which we may suppose served as an office for the Pitancer when he visited the place. The Hermitage paid, besides some other small rents, one of 3*s.* to the Prior of Kenilworth; and it was probably with him that there was the lawsuit, which caused the Pitancer the frequent and distant journeys which he mentions (p. 33)[2]. There is nothing else of interest in the account. Both income and expenditure are just over £8; a balance being left of 18¼*d.*

To pass to the ordinary Pitancer's accounts; of these two rolls are printed:

Robert Stanes, 1375-76.
John Newton, 1483-84.

Besides the Hermitage, the Pitancer had to account for the small manor

[1] It does not seem that Morton should be called (as I have called him) Pitancer of the Hermitage. His account is rather that of a Pitancer of Worcester, concerning the Hermitage.

[2] There was much litigation between Worcester and Kenilworth. See the Cellarer's account (p. 16).

of Pechesley, which was situated within, and subordinate to, Hallow. From the mention of repairs to the domus curie there, he seems also to have had a manor in St. John's, where the bulk of his property lay. For this and for Pechesley he paid rent to the Convent as represented by the Cellarer, as he did to the Bishop for the meadows of Pitchcroft (Puchcroft) and Duydleye[1]. He had several tenements in Worcester, and at various places scattered over the Priory estates—from Lindridge to Shipston.

Both pitancers have a long list of rents 'in decasu,' for which they require allowances: one of these is of interest, as showing that the Pitancer, like the Kitchener, expected to receive a fixed yearly sum from the offerings at St. Wulstan's shrine. In 1483 he did, it seems, receive 5*s*. but should have received 6*s*. (p. 38).

The revenue of the office amounts to a little under £75 in 1375-6, and a little over £50 in 1483-4, the difference being due to the unusually large balance to which Stanes succeeded (£18). Apart from the allowances for rents and repairs, the expenditure in both accounts is much the same, consisting, as it does, of fixed customary payments; viz., for the Portions, distributed in the Convent at Lady Day and Michaelmas; for blood-lettings (minutiones), occasions when a special allowance was made to the monks[2]; and for the Pitancer's O (O virgo virginum). Under this last head are also included allowances to the Prior, Subprior, and the rest for a pittance, and for wool (on St. John Baptist's day). In Newton's account the pittance is included in the O virgo virginum, and this perhaps explains why the other officials, when making their O's, are described as giving their customary 10*s*. to the Pitancer, sometimes for the pittance, sometimes for O virgo virginum[3]. Newton, we may observe, mentions no receipts of this kind; while Stanes' account evidently omits some officials. His total of 70*s*. (p. 34) received for O's is probably correct, but it requires seven contributors at 10*s*., and he has given only five[4].

V. Precentor.

Four rolls printed:

Robert Stanes, 1384-5.
John Malverne, Michaelmas to November, 1388.

[1] Since called Digley, or Diglis, lying to the South of the city: not to be confounded with Dudley in the North of the county.

[2] They received a similar allowance from the Cellarer (p. 19). The Prior's portion was double.

[3] Compare, in the two Kitcheners' accounts, 'Solutum pro O Coquinarii,' p. 26, with 'Solutum pro O virgo virginum,' p. 29, evidently of the same payment.

[4] Compare the corresponding entries at pp. 55, 64 of the former volume of Compotus Rolls.

John Clyve, Michaelmas, 1401, to February, 1402.
John Newton, 1482-3.

The principal estate of the Precentor was at Tibberton, where he held the manor under the Bishop. He had also pensions from the Clement's and All Saints' churches in Worcester; a hide of land at Merstone (Marston Sicca in Gloucestershire); and what is called in the Registrum 'pratellum in pomerio[1],' and may perhaps be identified with le Ferthyng, a close of meadow let to the Kitchener (pp. 41, 47). The Precentor disposes of but a small income, from £15 to £20. His duty is to arrange for the services of the Church; to alter the calendar according to the time of Easter ('croniclis mutandis,' p. 41), and to provide boards on which the Sundays and what is to be sung or said upon them may be exhibited in the cloister (p. 46). He provides a pittance for the passion-singers in Lent (p. 42), and the expenses of the Friars Preachers who preached in Advent and Lent. There are also two instances of his sending presents to a monk, who had performed a 'novena[2].'

Three out of the four Precentors' rolls have indentures attached to them with schedules of effects belonging to the office and passed from each holder of it to his successor. The first place[3] is occupied by the great treasure of the Precentory, 'a precious jewel in the form of the letter M adorned with precious stones'; in John Clyve's inventory alone it is mentioned that it had once been Saint Wulstan's[4]. This seems to have been used as a badge of the Precentor's office. There were also four caps (pillia) for the 'cantores,' for use in the choir, Clyve adds, on the seven [principal] festivals: two saddles, a 'monk's,' or side-saddle, for the Precentor, and a 'hackney's saddle' for his attendant: as well as a 'malesadel,' either a pack-saddle or a saddle with bags; some household utensils, and some implements belonging to the scriptorium; an unfinished Consuetudinary; a new copy of the Appropriation of Tibber-

[1] Pomerium I take to mean 'orchard,' and here perhaps the manor of Pirie juxta Wigorniam (Nash, II. 318). On p. 45 'the Pyriedore' is mentioned, i.e. probably a door from the Precentory into the Pirie, or the Precentor's close within it.

[2] 'Celebranti novem missas' (pp. 42, 44). This was generally undertaken in discharge of a vow. 'Celebrare novam missam,' of a priest saying his first mass, is quite a different matter, and is constantly mentioned in the accounts.

[3] In all of them except Clyve's inventory, which begins with 'a super-altar of stone enclosed in [a frame of] wood.'

[4] How did St. Wulstan use it? I would venture to suggest that it was the head of his pastoral staff. The distinctions in these matters between East and West were not sharply drawn in the 12th century: at the present day a Greek bishop's pastoral staff is crutch-headed, and the crutch not unfrequently takes very much the form of a 'Lombardic' Ω.

ton church; notice boards; and a brass or 'latyn' seal belonging to the office; besides some farm stock and material for repairs of buildings.

The church of Tibberton was appropriated to the Precentor by Bishop Maydenstone (1314-17), on account of the heavy expenses falling on the office in the writing of new books and the repair of old ones, and the ancient custom by which the Precentor was bound to maintain a horse and servant for riding on the concerns of the church [1]. These obligations explain the saddles and other items in the inventory: and show that the Precentor's province included the scriptorium. There was not, however, much writing of books done at Worcester [2]. Robert Stanes spends 5*s.* 4*d.* on the binding of books 'in white and red leather' (p. 42), many of which probably are still to be seen in the Library. John Malverne has a writer's chair (cathedra) made, and purchases a quire of 'velym' for writing the Consuetudinary above mentioned: but the vellum, still unwritten on, reappears in his inventory (pp. 43, 44). This was in 1388, and in 1402 the book, though it had been begun, was still unfinished (p. 47). However there was plenty of writing of a temporary character to occupy a scriptorium so poorly endowed; calendars, notices, briefs 'pro Confratribus defunctis [3],' besides copies of the Precentor's title-deeds, such as the Appropriation.

There is an interesting item on p. 46, a payment of a penny to the 'orator' of the town 'pro S. Oswaldo deportando.' It would seem that on occasions when the body of St. Oswald was to be carried in procession, the city authorities sent a deputation to the Convent to ask that this might be done, and their spokesman received a fee for his trouble. But why the Precentor should have sent a messenger to Oxford for the Good Friday sermon of 1402 (ibid.) I cannot explain. Possibly some Wycliffite preacher of repute was expected to make a formal recantation of his errors on that day. Many such recantations were made about the same date.

Who were the 'brevitores de hyda et kyme" (p. 42), I have altogether failed to discover.

VI. Elemosinarius (Almoner).

Roll of John de Muchelneye, 1345-46.

The Almoner was lord of the manors of (1) Iccombe, the southernmost of those 'islands' in Gloucestershire, which have been preserved from incorporation with that county until quite recent times[1] chiefly through their dependence on the Hundred of Oswaldslow.

(2) Shirnak (Shurnake), a small manor in the parish of Feckenham, which, though one of the ancient possessions of the Church of Worcester, has since reverted to the hundred of Halfshire to which Feckenham belongs[2]. (3) Ankerden (Ankerdam, Ancredham) and Dodenham: and (4) a manor in Lawerne. He had also pensions from the churches of Iccombe and Sedgeberrow, and rents from Overbury, Clyve, Berrow, and a place called 'the Noke[3]'; besides a very large number of tenements, mills, etc., in Worcester, and Tymberdene. He received besides quit rents from the Preceptor of St. Wulstan's Hospital (the 'Commandery'), and the Preceptor of 'Dimenur,' now Dinmore in Herefordshire.

His receipts from these and other sources amount to £64 7*s.* 6*d.*; but no account is given of the cronnus, or half-quarter, of corn which was furnished by every one of some twenty manors for the daily dole of three monks' portions, called St. Wulstan's alms, which it was the Almoner's duty to distribute[4], and the larger doles belonging to special occasions. Nor does he account for the sums received from other officials ('pro bladis S. Wulstani,' 'pro elemosina sua')[5], or from the weirs, which were generally charged with a dole of bread and beer[6]. The reason appears to be that all these contributions, whether in money or kind, were absolutely fixed and invariable, and their distribution was equally so; there was no need to repeat the particulars every year. Be this as it may, the account before us ignores them. The Almoner's expenditure of about £62 is entirely upon estate management, with the exception of a few items at the end concerned with the observances of Maundy Thursday.

On that day there was a supper for the Convent in the 'Misericordia,' the refectory attached to the Infirmary, after which the feet of thirteen poor men were washed by the Prior. So we find the Almoner buying linen cloth for the making of two towels 'for the Maundy' (pro Mandato, p. 54). And there was also a dole of sixpence to every monk and lay-brother made on the same occasion. The Prior received 3*s.* 3*d.*

In the expenditure, under the unusual heading of Precaria, are set down the expenses of certain ploughs (caruce) or plough-teams on the [1] Iccombe is now submerged; but Evenlode, Daylesford and Cutsdean are still reckoned to belong to Worcestershire, as well as the larger islands of Blockley and Tredington (including Shipston-on-Stour).

[2] In the Registrum (p. 646) it is distinctly stated of Shirnak, 'et est de libertate Hundredi de Oswald.'

[3] Probably in Martley parish (Nash, II. 167), and adjoining the Almoner's lands in Ankerden.

[4] Registrum, pp. 104—107. A cronnus is reckoned as equal to 52 loaves (p. 107 n).

Almoner's manors. Precarium is the term generally applied to 'boon-work': but the Almoner's expenditure would be on food, &c., for the tenants, while they were performing their duty of ploughing the arable lands of the demesne. Some light is also thrown by this account on the word crenina. As long as this word is applied to sheep, it is possible to connect it with crinis[1]: but with boves and muli de crenina (p. 50) this derivation is impossible. I would suggest that creuina (connected with cresco) should be read, and that oxen, or mules 'of increase' may mean animals bred on the estate.

It appears from this account that the Almonry was newly paved, within and without, during Muchelney's year of office.

VII. Hostillarius.

Roll of John Hatfeld, 1386-87.

The duty of the Hostillarius was to provide for the reception and lodging of guests of the Convent and their horses. His small income, under £7, is derived from rents at Hallow and Hultonstrete (Hylton Road, leading to Hallow); tithes from Phepston (Fepsinton), Henwick, Hallow and Lippard; and an uncertain payment from the keeper of the lamps.

There is little of interest in the account, but we find that the 'Hostillaria' had a Sanitarium of its own (to the support of which the Almoner contributes 6*s.* 8*d.*), and its own silver plate for the use of guests (p. 55).

VIII. Refectorarius.

Roll of John George, 1431-32.

Still smaller was the revenue of the Refectory-keeper, derived from rents at Barbourne and Hillhampton, and in the City of Worcester: he also had pensions from Twining, Powick and Tyberton; the whole amounting to 56*s.* 4*d.* He had the care of the Refectory and the Misericordia, and of the plate used at meals; besides the duty of keeping a dove-house in repair (p. 56).

We may notice that he spends 4*s.* 6*d.* on beer and mead and spices for the 'Wassell' on the eve of the Epiphany; that he provides vinegar (verges) for the Convent; pays and clothes a servitor in the Misericordia; and contributes his mite to the Council of Basel.

[1] See Canon Wilson's volume of Early Compotus Rolls. On p. 2 he suggests what I now believe is the right reading, viz. crevina.

IX. Infirmarius.

Roll of John Gloucester, 1378-79.

The Infirmarer receives rents, chiefly from the city of Worcester, to the value of 55*s.* 6*d.*, and pensions from no less than nine churches amounting to £7 6*s.* He starts the year with a balance of over £20, which he increases to £22. Indeed, except for a few 'potions' and 'electuaries' supplied to some of the monks, he had this year but few occasions to spend money. St. Andrew's day seems to have been specially honoured in the Infirmary (p. 58), and it was possibly on that day that the Infirmarer provided a pittance for the Convent. Gloucester records his payment of Poll-tax at the rate of 3*s.* 4*d.* for every monk.

There is an indenture with inventory of goods attached to this roll, but it is imperfect.

X. Custos Capelle (Master of the Chapel).

Roll of John Whytechurch, 1406-7.

The full title of this official is Custos, or Magister, Capella Beate Marie ecclesie cathedralis Wygornie. He had therefore the charge of the Lady Chapel, the choir of the Monks. Out of his rents, which he received entirely from the city, chiefly out of tenements in Brutport and Foregate, he pays the salaries of the 4 chapel clerks, supplies oil lamps and wax candles, sees to the washing and mending of surplices, and so forth.

More than half, however, of Whytechurch's expenditure is upon repairs of his tenements in Worcester. In the monotonous record of tiles, laths, and boards, it is pleasant to come upon the entry: 'For two locks with two keys bought after the departure of the Prince for the doors of the houses late Beatrice Staunton's.' The Prince was the Prince of Wales, afterwards Henry V., who had for a time made Worcester his head-quarters, while prosecuting the war against Owen Glendower, and it was in 1407 that he made a successful march through the heart of Wales to Aberystwyth. But there is a hint of the traditional 'wild Prince Hal' in the suggestion that the townsfolk waited for his departure before spending money on new locks for their doors.

It may be noted that the Master of the Chapel provides cloth and furs for the chapel-clerks 'against Christmas,' presumably for tippets for the winter.

XI. Sacrist.

Roll of John Clyve, 1423-24.

It is remarkable, considering the antiquity and importance of the office of the Sacrist, that this is the earliest Sacrist's roll now extant at Worcester.

Except for a few rents from Northpiddle and Cotheridge, the lands belonging to the Sacrist were all within the city or near to it. It is indeed uncertain where his principal farm, Newland, was situated; but there is good reason to think that it lay towards the northern extremity of the parish of Kempsey, and that it adjoined the Sacrist's urban property [1], as well as the property which he certainly possessed in Kempsey, viz. the meadow of Ladymede and the lands of Upper Wyggeley.

Within the city, the Sacrist had the important Manor of the Cathedral Precincts, called Guestenhall Manor, from the place where its courts were held, besides a very large number of tenements in different parts of the town. These, and all other tenements belonging to the Church in Worcester, were held to be within the Guestenhall Manor [2], which appears in this roll to be described as the Sacristaria.

The Sacrist had the patronage of the collegiate chapel of the Charnel-house (Carnaria), with its Master and three priests, and received from its endowments a rent of £10; out of which he seems to have paid only £4 to one chaplain there (p. 67); possibly he himself filled the office of Master.

He had also pensions from the churches of Berkeley and Dontesborne Militis; and 'the farm of the rectory' of Sodbury; all in Gloucestershire.

He received commutations for penance (p. 63), offerings at the shrines, and fees of some kind from the Confraternity (Confraria, p. 63), a religious union of the monks of a group of Benedictine houses which had been established by Saint Wulstan [2]. Possibly the Sacrist acted as the local Registrar of the brotherhood. We see from p. 64 (Allocacio) that the clerk of the Confraternity was allowed a chamber free of rent, and had the use of one of the Sacrist's horses (p. 69).

[1] The reasons for this conclusion may be briefly stated thus. To begin with, Newland near Malvern is out of the question, as it belonged to Great Malvern Priory, and lay to the west of the Severn; whereas Nash (II. 23), mentioning the gift of land from Bishop Montacute to the Sacrist at Upper Wyggeley, which is certainly in Kempsey parish, states that this land 'extended from the land of Thos. Huntlow to Newland': this Newland then must have been to the east of the river. Next, the dovecots of Newland and the 'Sacristaria' are mentioned in this account (p. 64), as if they were close together. Then the Newland at which lime was burned for the building of the dormitory (ante, p. 20) must have been near the Cathedral, and is likely to have been near the quarry at Norton (in Kempsey), mentioned p. 66, and may very probably have been the Sacrist's Newland.

[2] The associated monasteries were Worcester, Evesham, Chertsey, Bath, Pershore, Winchcombe and Gloucester; and there was a subsequent association established between Worcester and Ramsey. Similar unions between religious houses are to be met with in other parts of England, as at Durham. An essential feature of them was the right of any member dying to the prayers of all other members throughout the association. Hence the 'brevia pro confratribus defunctis' which occur in the Precentor's account, p. 49.

From all sources the income of the Sacrist's office amounts this year to nearly £150.

The Minute of John Clyve's expenditure are of exceptional interest. He pays for the making of two silver shields, gilt and enamelled with the arms of Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, and Isabella le Despenser his wife[1]; where they were to be placed when made, we do not learn. The Prior, John Fordham, presented this year to the church what is described as a 'precious' picture[2], which was brought from London and set up at the High Altar, the Sacrist defraying the rather heavy cost of red silk curtains, and the 'painting of the cover' of the picture, from which we may perhaps conclude that it was a triptych. The Sacrist also provides fringes and embroidery for a set of green vestments used at the Prior's altar[3]; and half the cost of an altar of wood erected in Cobham's chapel[4].' New iron work, tin-plated, is fixed, for what purpose is not recorded, at the High Altar, and the Book of the Epistles is newly bound. Two new banners were made for the dedication festival of the church; and the bells were re-hung in the great tower with new ropes and wheels[5].

The rest of the expenditure is not out of the ordinary; it was the duty of the Sacrist to provide wafer-bread and wine for Masses, lights and incense; to renew the wires by which lamps were suspended, and the thicker wire (which, we note, came from Gloucester), by means of which the hours of the clock were struck on the bells; to see to the mending of the Prior's mitre, and the hinges of the 'miserere' seats in the choir. There

[1] The Earl was at this time guardian to the infant King, Henry VI. He died Lieutenant of Normandy in 1439, at Rouen. His wife's tomb in the Abbey Church of Tewkesbury is well-known.

[2] 'Preciosa tabula': this of course does not mean what we should now call a 'valuable picture'; the words rather point to some external ornament, such as a jewelled frame. Possibly the picture was plated with gold or silver in the Byzantine style. Twenty years had scarcely passed since the visit of the Emperor Manuel II. to Paris and London: might this picture be a relic of his visit? He brought the furniture of his chapel with him.

[3] Would this have been in the south choir-transept, since called the Dean's chapel? The ritual use of green was an innovation at this date at Worcester, where the Use of Sarum was followed.

[4] Qu. the Jesus Chapel off the North aisle? Bp. Cobham (1317—27) is buried just outside it.

[5] Or possibly some new bells were, in this year of embellishment, added to the peal. Originally there were but five, hung in the detached steeple, which figures in one of Dugdale's views of the Cathedral, on the north side of the Church, and connected with it by a covered way. The central tower was built in 1374, and when it was finished, Dr. Thomas (Survey, p. 6), tells us, 'the Bells were taken out of the Clochium or Leaden Steeple.' He does not say that they were immediately hung in the central tower, but it is not likely they waited 50 years to be placed in position. On p. 66 I suppose '1 campana in novo opere' may mean either 'a bell in the new building,' or 'a bell belonging to the new set.'

are payments for all these things; and likewise to the bearers of the Chest[1], the Dragon, and the banners in the processions on St. Mark's Day and at Rogation-tide, and of torches in the Corpus Christi procession; on the latter festival there is also a payment to 'players,' no doubt in a Mystery play (p. 68). The Sacrist also pays the salaries of clerks in the Cathedral, of the door-keeper, and the chaplain 'at the Red Door'; besides a chaplain at Grafton (in Bromsgrove), a chapelry of which he had the great tithes[2].

Some other entries are of interest. Clyve visited Oxford to witness the inception in theology of Thomas Ledbury, a monk of the house, who became Prior in 1438, and prolonged his journey to London for an interview with the Bishop. On the occasion of the obit of Bishop William de Bleis (1218—36), the founder of the Charnel-house, the Sacrist gives the Pitancer a mark, no doubt to provide a pittance for the Convent; and half a mark to the Convent 'for their procession to the Altar of St. Edmund[3].' One would like to know why he gave the Prior's chaplain 2s. 'for green wax,' and 4s. to the Oxford scholars, also for wax.

It is strange that O oriens, the Sacrist's O, is not mentioned in this account.

XII. Subcellarer.

Roll of William de Peyto, 1326, January to Michaelmas.

The care of the consumable stores belonging to the Convent was the proper function of the Cellarer; but that official, being also Bursar, delegated this part of his duties to his deputy, the Subcellarer, who received from the manors and estates belonging to the Priory all the tithes and produce of the demesne lands which came to Worcester in the form of grain.

The Subcellarer's account differs from all the rest in being expressed entirely in terms of corn-measure—quarters, strikes, and hoppers[4]: not a single sum of money is to be found in the whole of Peyto's Computus; it was the quantity, not the value, of the store that was to be recorded.

[1] The Chest (cista) may have been a reliquary; or it may have been a collecting-box.

[2] He repaired the chancel there this year (p. 66), and would seem to have paid 20*s.* to the lord of the Manor, Sir Humphrey Stafford (afterwards slain in Jack Cade's rising) for overseeing the work, more probably for providing a competent clerk of the works. For the 'Red Door,' I am indebted to Canon Wilson for a reference to the Liber Pensionum, f. 54 b, where is mentioned the endowment of a chaplain 'to serve the altar of the blessed Mary at rededore.' The text (ad rubeum ostium, p. 67) shews that rede = red, and is not a mistake for rode or rood.

[3] St. Edmund, archbishop of Canterbury (d. 1240).

[4] Quarterium, estricha, hoppere. The accounts shew that these measures are equivalent to our quarters, bushels, and pecks.

The account is under two heads—Wheat, and Barley and Oats: under each heading the contributory manors are enumerated, with the quantities supplied by them to the Convent, it being noted in each case whether the supply comes from the demesne or the tithes: wheat is sometimes sent in the form of flour. It is evident that the barns on the Priory manors were used in common by all of them; thus it happens that Netherton, for instance, besides sending its own 6 qrs. sends also 4 qrs. 'of the crops of Clyve,' and 1½ qrs. 'of the crops of Herforton.' The distance between the harvest and the place where it is garnered is often considerable, but it will be found that the corn, if not stored at home, is always carried to some place nearer to Worcester than where it was grown. Blackwell grain is found in the barns of Sedgeberrow, Teddington, Overbury and elsewhere; but no one thought of storing Sedgeberrow crops in Blackwell barns.

Of 604 qrs. of wheat received by the Subcellarer, 530 were consumed in the Convent, during the 37 weeks covered by Peyto's account, in the form of bread, pasties, pies, and pancakes [1], while 14 qrs. were distributed in gifts, as to the Franciscans of Worcester, the Nuns of Whiston, and to dependents of the monastery outside; 8 qrs. 7 bus. are set aside for malting, and are reckoned twice over in the account, as they are added to the totals of barley and oats received (p. 73). These totals amount to 864 qrs. of barley, 458 qrs. of oats, to be expended in feeding the horses of the cellarer, and of the household and guests of the Prior, in fattening geese and chickens, in making 'pottage,' and in gifts to bishops and other distinguished guests; these last, it seems, were presented through the Porter. But the bulk of the barley and oats, less than 993 qrs., was used for brewing.

XIII. Tumbarius.

Two Rolls { John Wytteneye, Michaelmas, 1375, to Michaelmas, 1376, and from Michaelmas, 1376, to Michaelmas, 1377.
Roger Kingeslond, 1475-76.

In the first of these rolls the Tumbarius is described as the Guardian of the shrines (feretra) of SS. Oswald and Wulstan; and his duties consisted in keeping the shrines in repair and maintaining a sufficient supply of wax lights. For these objects he had some rents from the City of Worcester—we hear in particular of a tenement opposite St. Nicholas' Church—and a pension from the Church [2] of Lindridge, amounting together

[1] 'Pastellis, piis, flaonibus.' Neither 'pia' nor 'pium' is to be found in Ducange, yet one of these must be the nominative to 'piis,' as certainly as the meaning must be 'pies.'

[2] In the first account it is said to be derived from the 'salt-pan' (salina) of Lindridge: but the two statements are not incompatible.

to £8 a year. In his first year Wytteneye spent over £2 on the shrine of St. Wulstan, buying a new cover for it of linen cloth, which he had painted, or perhaps embroidered: he also decorated it with 7 'pynacles.' No expenditure of this kind is to be found in Wytteneye's account of the following year, nor in Kingeslond's: but both of these Tumbarii spend at least £5 a year on wax, the annual consumption of which at the shrines is stated at about 185 lbs. It is to be observed that the Tumbarius had nothing to do with the offerings made at the shrines: these were received by the Sacrist.

XIV. Sheepreeve (Magister Bercarius).

Roll of Richard Persons, 1493-94.

The earliest extant roll of a Sheepreeve at Worcester is dated 24 Hen. VI. (1445), and it is not likely that the office existed long before that year. The rage for sheep-farming, with the resulting transformation of arable land into sheepwalk, so frequently denounced by writers of the sixteenth century, hardly began before the reign of Henry VII, but the appointment of a Sheepreeve, a Magister Bercarius, where before there had been only shepherds, shews that the Monks of Worcester were alive to the changing conditions of English farming.

It does not appear from this Roll (which, by the way, is the earliest of the Bercarius rolls which is legible throughout) over what area the authority of the Sheepreeve extended, but it is clear that his head-quarters were at Cropthorn, where he executes repairs at the manor-house (p. 80), and holds a court; he also sees to the 'whiting' of the chancel of the church. But if he had the farm of the manor, he received very little rent from it, and what he received came to him in a roundabout fashion from the Collector for the Priory[1]. Besides his rent, his receipts are derived from the sale of stock and wool; they amount altogether to £4 7*s.* 8¾*d.*, and he spends them on the care of his sheep, and the repairs above mentioned. He pockets his own salary of 1 mark, but the shepherds under him have to look to the Collector for their pay. Altogether he seems to have earned his balance of 3*s.* 2¾*d.*, which is allowed to him as a gratuity; et sic recessit quietus.

It must be observed that he alone of all the 'computantes' is not a monk, but a paid official of the monastery.

[1] He received, he tells us, 28*s.* 0¾*d.* from the Collector of Cropthorn 'as of the rent of himself Richard Persons.' This is a puzzle, but it is evident that Persons was more of a shepherd than a scholar.

PRIORS OF WORCESTER, 1317—1499.

THE following list of the Priors of Worcester during the period covered by these Rolls may be found useful, as "the Lord Prior" is mentioned in almost every account, but never by name. I have added the pages of the book, to shew who is the Prior referred to on these pages in the text.

The series of mitred Priors begins with John de Evesham, who obtained from Clement VI. the right to use all episcopal ornaments in 1351, but the right was not fully recognized by the Bishop until 1391, in the time of Prior Grene; and then with certain restrictions, designed to prevent the appearance of two Bishops presiding in the same church at the same time.

[1] A fodder of lead varies locally from 78 cwt. to 86 cwt. Taking the latter estimate, 3 feet would be about equivalent to 3 qrs., since the price, at the rate given, would be 11*s.* 7*d.* But the reading is certainly pedibus, not quarteriis.

[2] In the year 1376 Advent Sunday fell on St. Andrew's Day. Consequently the 4th Sunday after St. Andrew was 28 December, and the 'first Sunday after Christmas' (i.e. after Christmas week) was 4 January, the first Sunday of 1377.

[1] This sentence (beginning 'Solutum') is very illegible in both MSS. and the meaning is obscure; but it seems that certain poor people of Aston performed certain tasks due from the villani of Tedyntone, and were rewarded. Carentibus is the reading of 69 a, and if we might read opere for quia (as is just possible) the sense would be improved.

[Sequitur Indentura.]

Hec Indentura facta in festo sancti Thome apostoli anno Domini millesimo ccclxxxviij Testatur quod frater Iohannes Malverne nuper precentor ecclesie cathedralis Wygornie dimisit fratri Iohanni Hatfeld eidem in officio Precentoris eiusdem ecclesie succedenti omnia subscripta, videlicet: Vnum iocale preciosum formatum in modum littere M. ornatum lapidibus preciosis; Item 4 pillia pro cantoribus in choro; Item 1 sellam monachalem cum freno pertinente ad eandem; Item 1 vocatam hakeneys sadel cum freno; Item 1 malsadel sine freno; Item 1 par pressores; Item 1 cultellum ad planandos libros cum aliis paruis instrumentis; Item duo duodenas de membrana vitulina pro libro consuetudinum scribendo; Item apud Tyburton tres ollas eneas; Item 1 peluim cum lauacro; Item 1 boket ad hauriendam aquam ligatum cum ferro; Item 1 marcam in pecunia numerata; Item 1 carectam debilem cum ferro ligatam venditam[1] Iohanni Tandy de Tyburton; Item [in] manibus Willelmi Hichcoks de Tyburton 45*s.* 11*d.* remanentia de bladis ibidem eidem Willelmo anno preterito venditis pro 10*l.*

[1] This explains why the 13*s.* 4*d.* 'de 1 carecta vendita' is not reckoned in the total of the recepta forinsecus above. The purchaser had not taken away the cart, though he had paid for it: so both the cart and its price, 'marcam in pecunia numerata,' appear in this inventory.'

[It will be seen that there still remains £5 0*s.* 1½*d.* 'in the hands of J. Tredyntone' unaccounted for; and a store of 120lb. of wax.

In Wytteneye's next account (C. 454), 1377-78, this sum is not mentioned: the excess of expenditure over income has become 16*s.* 4½*d.*: this however is more than balanced by the store of wax, which is still 120 lb.]

ACCOUNT OF ROGER KINGESLOND, TUMBARIUS, 1475-76. (C. 472.)

Computus Fratris Rogerii Kingeslone[1] Tumbarii ecclesie Cathedralis beate Marie Wigorniensis Ab incrastino Sancti Michaelis Archangeli Anno regni regis Edwardi quarti xv° usque in crastinum eiusdem festi Anno dicti regis xvj°.

[On the back of the roll is an account of the wax bought and expended, now illegible, except the last sentence:

Et remanent 100 lb. cere pro quibuscumque tumbariis futuris temporibus successuris.]

[1] This sum is a manifest blunder; the true amount is £6 9*s.* 3*d.*, and consequently the Summa of the whole section should be £6 14*s.* 8*d.*, and the Summa totalis misarum £9 7*s.* 3¾*d.* Even with Kingeslond's figures the excess of expenditure over income would not amount to 9*s.*; and it is in fact only 1*s.* 9¾*d.*

Arura, ploughing; a custumariorum, the ploughing which the customary tenants were bound to perform, 1, 2
Arvina, fat, grease, 80
Assere, 20, 21 (seems to be for assero, from asserum, Fr. acier), steel
Assisa, assize, 16: [assisa panis, the standard of bread fixed at a sitting held for the purpose; hence the word comes to mean] assessment, valuation: certus redditus assise, 7
Auca, goose, the generic term, freq.; gander, goose, and gosling, are distinguished as ancer, auca, aucellus, 32
Auene, oats: used for brewing, 74
Autumpnus, harvest; the word is used as a heading for expenditure on getting in the harvest
Auxilium, an 'aid' (tax), 16, 23. [At both these references the aid is due from the church of Cropthorn, and is payable to the archdeacon, at the rate of 6*d*. a year: no such import is levied on any other church in these accounts.]
Axella, axle, 66

B

Bakyng-irons, since they are mentioned as in pairs, seem to have been a kind of tongs, used in the baking of the sacramental wafers, or hosts, 66
Ballium, balyum (fabri), baliolum, a portable grate, or fire-basket (one of a hundred meanings of this word), 21
Ballivus, a steward, bailiff, 3, 9, &c.
Bankeres, cloths for covering benches, 4
Bannenotre; a bannut- or walnut-tree, 24; bannut is the local name of a kind of walnut having a comparatively smooth shell. The 'Bannut-tree Pass' is still known at Malvern, though the tree from which it took its name has disappeared some five years since.
Barchemon, for bargeman, 57
Bercaria, a sheepfold, 43, &c.
Bercarius, a shepherd, 26, 53, 80; magister B. the Sheepreeve, 79 cause fastened with cross-straps, like the Roman military boot), 3, &c.

Calix, a chalice, 4, 59
Canabis, hemp, 18
Cancellus, cancelli, 19; properly the bar or railings separating the more honourable part of a building from the rest; hence the part so separated, esp. the chancel of a church, 66, 80
Caneua, canvas, prob. a counterpane in Chamberlain's inventory, 4
Capa, a cope, 19
Capella, chapel; at Worcester esp. the Lady-Chapel, of which the Custos, or Magister, Capelle had the charge, 60. He was also choir-master, in so far as the Lady-Chapel was the Conventual choir, and the clerks, clerici capelle, were under him: so Magister capelle B.M. Malvernie, 16
Capellanus, a chaplain; a priest receiving a stipend for performing certain service, but without a benefice: the Precentor provided for his church of Tibberton in this way, 49
Capitulum, a Chapter: C. generale, the Chapter-general of the Benedictine Order, freq.; of the Hospitallers, 36. Chapters were also held at Wolverley, which was a 'peculiar' of the Priory, 15
